Partnering with small islands for a resilient future

When the last International Conference on Small Island Developing States was held in 2014, there was no COVID-19 pandemic and no global economic recession and much fewer geopolitical tensions. The climate emergency, while present, had not reached the heights it has today.

This year, as the world prepares to meet in Antigua and Barbuda in May for the fourth International Conference on Small Island Developing States \(SIDS4\), things are different. While SIDS have made some progress towards sustainable development, their small size, geographical remoteness and the limited scale of their economies have left them particularly vulnerable amid a raging storm of acute external shocks.

Even with the Sustainable Development Goals and the Paris Agreement on Climate Change now in place as clear target-driven global agreements to make the world better for everyone everywhere, SIDS are being left behind. The time for a new programme of action for SIDS is now.

“SIDS are the stewards of our ocean and bastions of environmental justice. Amid today’s turmoil, they are both facing the fire and fueling the change,” said UN DESA Under-Secretary-General Li Junhua, also serving as Secretary-General of the SIDS4 Conference. “Building their resilience ensures a sustainable future for us all.”

He added: “We must craft an ambitious programme of action that is robust and achievable. Not a wish list, but an action list.”

Countries took a big step in developing that action list last month in New York during the first Preparatory Committee session for the Conference. Delegates met from 22 to 26 January for the first round of discussions about the zero draft outcome document. It outlines a development plan aimed at bolstering more resilient societies in SIDS including by improving their access to finance—including climate finance—strengthening data collection, accelerating innovation and digitalization, and enabling partnerships. Special attention has also been placed on improving education and employment opportunities for children and youth, and other vulnerable groups.

“As co-chairs, we are happy to note the strong showing we saw from member states and the UN system and civil society,” said H.E Dr. Ali Naseer Mohamed, Permanent Representative of Maldives to the UN and co-chair of the SIDS4 Preparatory Committee with New Zealand, at a news conference during the preparatory meetings. “We heard strong commitments for a more sharply focused and action-oriented programme of action.”

Ambassador Mohamed noted: “SIDS are not seeking charity. SIDS are looking for genuine partnerships.”

The SIDS4 Conference comes at a critical time for small islands, which face rising sea levels and a rising debt burden.

“The cumulative effects of weather, climate and water-related hazards in SIDS, which caused a staggering US$153 billion dollars of losses in the last 50 years continue to pose existential threats to the 39 small island states,” said Rabab Fatima, UN High Representative for Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, and Special Adviser for the SIDS4 Conference.

Good ideas for how to build resilience in SIDS are coming from the people living on small islands in addition to their development partners. The upcoming conference in Antigua and Barbuda will provide opportunities for all stakeholder groups to learn from each other and create new partnerships to benefit all.

“We believe this Conference is going to put down a marker for transformation,” said H.E. Walton A. Webson, Permanent Representative of Antigua and Barbuda.

SIDS4 zero draft outcome document advances at first Preparatory Committee session in New York

The first session of the Preparatory Committee for the SIDS4 Conference, co-chaired by H.E. Ms. Carolyn Schwalger, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of New Zealand to the United Nations, and H.E. Dr. Ali Naseer Mohamed, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of Maldives to the United Nations, met from 22 to 26 January in New York to consider the zero draft outcome document and to take a number of procedural decisions, including granting special accreditation to 105 NGOs, major groups and other stakeholders in the Conference.

The zero draft outcome document builds on the collective aspirations and outcomes from a series of SIDS regional and interregional preparatory meetings conducted in 2023, and it seeks to set out a new and ambitious 10-year action plan for SIDS, aimed at succeeding the SAMOA Pathway.

The co-chairs have organized a comprehensive schedule to ensure the continuation and deepening of the discussions on the outcome document, planning three additional rounds of negotiations before the Second Preparatory Committee Meeting, slated for 1 to 5 April.

At the core of the zero draft and the discussions at the preparatory meeting were urgent calls for action to bolster the resilience of SIDS against climate change impacts. The document also highlights the critical need for enhanced access to concessional finance, alongside emphasizing the importance of protecting oceans, promoting the blue economy, building capacity, diversifying economies, strengthening health systems and advancing social inclusion.

The general discussions featured a diverse range of voices, including nine statements on behalf of a group of countries, 32 national statements, 11 contributions from United Nations system entities, and eight presentations by accredited civil society organizations (CSOs).

Open until 1 March: Applications for the UN SIDS Partnership Awards 2024

The UN SIDS Partnership Awards was established by UN Member States in 2021 to recognize and reward the efforts of the best and most noteworthy, genuine and durable partnerships in the implementation of the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA Pathway). The Awards provide an opportunity to reward the most successful SIDS partnerships, highlight best practices, increase the visibility of the SIDS Partnership Framework, motivate the creation of new SIDS partnerships and incentivize the registrations of new partnerships for SIDS.

We are inviting partnerships for Small Island Developing States (SIDS) to apply for the United Nations SIDS Partnerships Awards 2024. The deadline for the application is Friday, 1 March. Details can be found here.

The SIDS Partnerships Awards are given in each of the three dimensions of sustainable development: 1) economic, 2) social and 3) environment. Subject to funding, one representative from each of the three winning partnerships may be invited to New York to receive a certificate. The ceremony will take place in the margins of High-Level Political Forum 2024, during the Global Multi-Stakeholder SIDS Partnership Dialogue.

From developing to digital; charting the course for SIDS' transformation (UNDP blog)

By Marcos Neto, UN Assistant Secretary-General and Director of UNDP's Bureau for Policy and Programme Support, and Robert Opp, UNDP's Chief Digital Officer

Small Island Developing States, or SIDS, have long been pioneers in international development, often compelled by the challenges they face. Positioned on the frontlines of climate change, they lead efforts in mitigation, adaptation, and advocacy, and despite their geographical dispersion, they are innovating approaches to resilience and sustainability. SIDS are leveraging digital tools and technologies for real and positive impact on their countries and communities. They are leaders in internet gender parity, whilst a number perform strongly on global indices of cybersecurity. They are increasingly becoming Small Island Digital States.

This shift is reshaping the way people in SIDS live and work, facilitating connectivity, shaping new industries and opportunities, and ensuring that public services can reach even the most remote areas. From the SIDS Global Data Hub in Antigua and Barbuda to the national digital strategies in the Cook Islands and Niue, to the Digital Pathway of Samoa, and substantial innovation efforts in countries such as Trinidad and Tobago, the Maldives, and São Tomé and Príncipe, digital is positively changing lives and livelihoods. ...
